The Two Vanrevels

By BOOTH TARKINGTON

Author of "The Gentleman From Indiana" and "Monsieur Beaucaire"

Copyright, 1902, by S. S. McClure Co.

"But you haven't told why you broke the guitar?"
"If thine eyes are free, pluck it out!" I ought to have known the hands that played to her."

"And cut your own hair or singing to her?"

"She was right," interrupted Miss Betty wearily. She had danced long and hard, and she was very tired.

Mrs. Tanberry's staccato laugh was an unspeakable, forgotten, and so do, princess!" she cried. "And I think they are getting it."

"No, no; I don't mean—"

"We've turned their heads, my dear, between us, you and I, and we'll have to turn 'em again, or they'll break their necks looking over their shoulders at us, the owls!" She pressed the girl's hand affectionately. "But you'll let me say something just once and forgive me because we're the same foolish age, you know. It's only this: The next young man you suppress, take him off in a corner. Lead him away from the crowd where he won't have to stand and let them look at him afterward.
That's all, my dear, and you mustn't mind."

"I'm not sorry!" said Miss Betty hotly.

"No, no," said Mrs. Tanberry, soothingly. "It was better this time to do just what you did. I have done it myself, to make quite sure he would keep away—because I like him."

"I'm not sorry," said Miss Betty again.

"I'm not sorry!" she repeated and reiterated to herself after Mrs. Tan-berry had gone to bed. She had sunk into a chair in the library with a book, and "I'm not sorry" she whispered as the open unread page blurred before her; "I'm not sorry!" He had needed his lesson, but she had to bear the recollection of how white his face went when he received it. Her affront had put about him a strange loneliness, the lone figure with the stilled crowd staring, it had made a picture from which her mind's eye had been unable to escape, danced she never so hard and late. Unconsciously Robert Carewe's daughter had avenged the other lonely figure which had stood in lonely humiliation before the staring eyes.

"I'm not sorry!" Ah, did they think it was in her to hurt any living thing in the world? The book dropped from her lap, and she bowed her head upon her hands. "I'm not sorry!" — and tears upon the small lace gauntlets!

She saw them and with an incoherent exclamation, half self pitying, half impatient, ran out to the stars above her garden.

She was there for perhaps half an hour, and just before she returned to the house she did a singular thing.

Standing where all was clear to the sky, where she had stood after her talk with the incroyable when he had bid her look to the stars, she raised her arms to them again, her face, pale with a great tenderness, uplifted.

"You, you, you!" she whispered. "I love you!"

And yet it was to nothing definite, to no man nor outline of a man, to no phantom nor dream lover, that she spoke; neither to him who had affronted nor to him who had bidden her look to the stars. Nor was it to the stars themselves.

She returned slowly and thoughtfully to the house, wondering what she had meant.

CHAPTER XI.

CRAILEY came home the next day with a new poem, but no fish. He lounged up the stairs late in the afternoon, humming cheerfully to himself and, dropping his rod in a corner of Tom's office, laid the poem on the desk before his partner, "chuckled softly and requested Mr. Vanrevel to set the rhymes to music immediately.

"Try it on your instrument," he said.
"It's a simple verse about nothing but stars, and you can work it out in twenty minutes with the guitar."

"It is broken," said Tom, not looking up from his work.

"Broken! When?"

"Who broke it?"

"It fell from the table in my room."

"How? Easily mended, isn't it?"

"I think I shall not play it soon again."

Crailey swung his long legs off the sofa and abruptly sat up. "What's this?" he asked gravely.

Tom pushed his papers away from him, rose and went to the dusty window that looked to the west, where, at the end of the long street, the sun was setting behind the ruins of charred timbers.

"It seems that I played once too often," he said.

Crailey was thoroughly astonished.

He went to his friend and dropped a hand lightly on his shoulder. "What made you break the guitar? Tell me."

"What makes you think I broke it?" asked his partner sharply.

"Tell me why you did it," said Crailey.

And Tom, pacing the room, told him, while Crailey stood in silence looking him eagerly in the eye whenever Tom turned his way. The listener interrupted seldom. Once it was to exclaim:

"Suddenly a shudder of forehead and spoke aloud, while, from horizon to horizon, the night air grew thick with the whispered laughter of observing hobgoblins:

"And even if there had been no stairway, we could have slid down the loose lime!"

He retraced his steps, a tall, gray figure moving slowly through the blue darkness, and his lips formed the heartsick shadow of a smile when he found that he had unconsciously turned into Carewe street. Presently he came to a gap in a hedge, through which he had sometimes stolen to hear the sound of a harp and a girl's voice singing, but he did not enter there tonight, though he paused a moment, his head bowed on his breast.

There came a sound of voices. They seemed to be moving toward the hedge, toward the gap where he stood, one a man's, eager, quick, but very musical; the other a girl's, a rich and clear contralto that passed into Tom's soul like a psalm of rejoicing and like a scintillation of flame. He shivered and moved away quickly, but not before the man's voice, somewhat louder for the moment, came distinctly from the other side of the hedge.

"After all," said the voice, with a ripple of laughter—"after all, weren't you a little hard on that poor Mr.
Gray?"

Tom did not understand, but he knew the voice. It was that of Crailey Gray.

He heard the same voice again that night and again stood unseen. Long after midnight he was still tramping the streets on his lonely rounds when he chanced to pass the Rouen House, which hostelry bore to the uninhabited its doors, all hostilities for the night in strict compliance with the law of the city fathers, yet a slender wand of bright light might be discovered underneath the street door of the barroom.

From within the merry retreat issued an uproar of shouting, raucous laughing, and the pounding of glasses on tables, heralding all too plainly the hypocrisy of the landlord and possibly that of the city fathers also. Tom knew what company was gathered there—gamblers, truckmen, drunken farmers, men from the river steamers making riot, while their boats lay at the wharf, with a motley gathering of good-for-nothings of the back alleys and tipping clerks from the Main street stores. There came loud cries for a song, and in answer the voice of Crailey rose over the general din, somewhat hoarse and never so musical when he sang, but when he spoke, yet so touching in its dramatic tenderness that soon the noise fell away, and the roisterers sat quietly to listen. It was not the first time Ben Jonson's song had stilled a disreputable company:

"I sent thee late a rose wreath, Not much, but still a wreath."

"And give if the hope that there It might not withered be."

Perh just then Vanrevel would have wished to hear him sing anything in the world rather than that, for on Crailey's lips it carried too much meaning, tonight, after the voice in the garden. And Tom lingered no more near the betraying sliver of light beneath the door than he had by the gap in the hedge, but went steadily on his way.

Not far from the hotel he passed a small building brightly lighted and echoing with unusual clamors of industry—the office of the Rouen Journal.

The press was going, and Mr. Cummings' thin figure crossed and recrossed the windows, while his voice could be heard energetically bidding his assistants to "Look alive!" so that Tom imagined that something might have happened between the Nueces river and the Rio Grande, but he did not stop to ask the journalist, for he desired to behold the face of none of his friends until he had fought out some things within himself. So he strode on toward nowhere.

Day was breaking when Mr. Gray climbed the stairs to his room. There were two flights of the ascent of the first of which occupied about half an hour of Crailey's invaluable time, and the second might have taken more of it or possibly consumed the greater part of the morning had he received no assistance; but, as he reclined to meditate upon the first landing, another man entered the hallway from without, ascended quickly, and Crailey became pleasantly conscious that two strong hands had lifted him to his feet and presently that he was being borne aloft upon the newcomer's back. It seemed quite a journey, yet the motion was sooth, so he made no effort to open his eyes until he found himself gently deposited upon the couch in his own chamber, when he smiled amiably and, looking up, discovered his partner standing over him.

Tom was very pale, and there were deep violet scratches beneath his eyes.

For once in his life he had come home later than Crailey.

"First time, you know," said Crailey, with difficulty. "You'll admit first time completely incapable? Often needed guide hand, but never quite before."

"Yes," said Tom quietly.

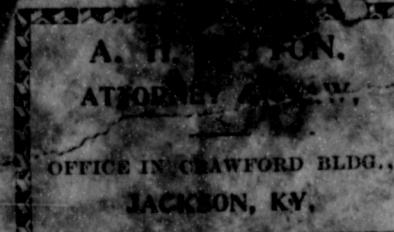

"First time I ever saw you."

"I must."

He struck his open pa-sure of foot and hunched tightly to himself. The door of the office was closed. Crailey did not look in, but presently appeared on the opposite side of the street and offered badge to the boy who tolled at the shutters.

The bell had almost ceased to ring when a lady, dressed plainly in black, but graceful and tall, came rapidly out of Carewe street, turned at the corner by

FRIDAY MARCH 23.

L. C. Roark, attorney, was over on Friday Monday representing James B. Strong in a formidable de-tainer suit.

All persons owing the firm of Noble & Noble, either by notes or accounts, will call and settle at once, or collections will be enforced. Our friends demand it.

Respectfully yours,

Noble & Noble.

Irvine McDaniel, of Rousseau, was here last week, purchasing a stock of goods for his new store just below the mouth of Wolfe Creek. He has just built a new store house at that place. He was formerly in business near the mouth of Hunting Creek.

Crawford has a new ad in our paper this week. Call on them and see their bargains. Those who advertise want your trade and you can safely count on them treating you better than those who don't.

The contests over some of the county offices in Perry county have been decided in favor of the contestants, giving the office of county judge to H. T. Crawford over E. C. Duff; sheriff to S. B. Holliday over M. C. Eversole, and elder to Ira Combs. The contestants will appeal to the Court of Appeals. The races were very close there last November, Duff defeating Crawford by only 7 votes on the face of the returns. Contests were at once instituted with the above result.

Talbot Holliday, of Hazard, is a revenue man and was engaged in the battle with moonshiners in Knott county a short time ago, wherein Perry Sloan and Faro Sloan were killed and H. Short and John P. Sloan, the father of Perry and Faro, were wounded on the moonshiners' side and Malcolm Holliday, Deputy Collector and brother of Talbot was wounded, was in Berea last week visiting his brother, G. D. Holliday. Malcolm Holliday, who was wounded in the battle, is now well on the way to recovery and is in the Revenue Office at Danville, filling the place of Samuel Collins, who will take Holliday's place for a while until Malcolm gets well of his wounds at which time he will fill his old place. —Berea News.

Our stock of Clothing and Shoes are worth inspection before buying elsewhere. Thanking you for favors and wishing a continuance of the same. Yours respectfully, CRAWFORD & CO.

Mt. Sterling Court.

March county court day at Mt. Sterling was a raw, dismal day and only a small crowd was in town. There was about 1,250 cattle on the market and sales were slow. The quality was inferior while prices ranged about $1,000 per head. Steers brought up to 40 of a series of entertainments for the instruction and entertainment of the public at Jackson. Mr. Powell has one of the finest stereopticons now and feels confident the public will appreciate the entertainments. First will be "The Sign of the Cross," Wilson Barrett's famous story of the Christian Martyrs of the time of Nero. The pictures will be works of beauty and rare art and the lecture is of thrilling interest from start to finish. The girls' physical culture club, in their handsome new uniforms, will give a special drill as a part of the entertainment. Proceeds to help to pay for the stereopticon. Admission, adults 25 cents; children, 15 cents.

By Old Kentucky Home.

Representative John C. Griffith, of Breathitt county, introduced the following resolution in the closing hours of the regular session of the General Assembly, but in the excitement of preparations for getting away he could not secure consideration of it, and the house adjourned without passing it. The resolution follows:

Whereas, the work of the Legislature being completed and it becomes necessary to adjourn sine die; and,

Whereas, the members of this House may never meet again until they arrive on the other shore, be it

Resolved, That now, before final adjournment, the members, for old times' sake, and as a tribute to the Grand Old Commonwealth, sing that soul stirring song, "My Old Kentucky Home," with all the pathos and feeling of which our voices are capable and with all the melody and tenderness which this old song can inspire.

Senate bill repealing charter of High School.

House bill regulating child labor and factories.

House bill providing for a tuberculosis hospital in Louisville, to be erected by special levy.

House bill fixing a penalty for abandoning children.

The Local Option Bill.

The Local Option Bill passed the House and Senate. The bill provides that:

All counties, with the exception of those having cities of the first, second, third and fourth classes, and the counties outside these cities are made separate units.

If the county votes "dry" no precinct in that county can be "wet."

On the other hand, if a county votes "wet," any precinct in that county, which previous to the election was "dry," shall remain "dry."

The same rule applies as well to the cities of the first, second, third and fourth classes.

There are at present 119 counties in the State. Sixty-eight have local option. The temperance people claim that under the bill passed twenty-seven more will be added to their column and that they have a great chance to carry other units.
